CLIMBING HIGHER WITH ALEX:

Finding Connection Through Challenge!

Energetic and adventurous, Alex Yanchar thrives in moments that test his focus and endurance. Whether it's climbing twelve hours a week, waking at 2 a.m. to hike Mahogany Mountain, or spending early Sunday mornings birdwatching along the Provo River Delta, Alex finds joy in challenging himself while connecting with the world around him. For him, climbing isn't just about reaching the top—it's about problem-solving, teamwork, and the sense of community that comes from helping others improve alongside him. That same mindset carries into his academics and capstone project, where he offers free ACT tutoring to help level the playing field for students who can't afford prep courses. Through every climb, hike, and tutoring session, Alex shows that growth and connection are strongest when shared.

Touchdowns and Traditions

Sunday afternoons are sacred in the Yanchar household, where Alex and his dad watch Ohio State football. The excitement isn't just about touchdowns—it's about the jokes, debates, and tradition they share. Even during tough losses, Alex laughs at his dad's dramatic reactions, turning every game into a moment of connection. For him, football isn't just a sport; it's a way to bond, carry on family traditions, and enjoy being in the moment.

Leveling the Field: Alex's Mission for Fair Opportunity

For Alex, standardized tests aren't just numbers—they reflect opportunity, or the lack of it. He finds it frustrating that a single exam can have such a huge impact on a student's future. He's especially frustrated that wealthier peers can buy prep courses, tutoring, and other resources, giving them an advantage. Determined to level the playing field, Alex teamed up with Brennan for his capstone project, offering free ACT tutoring to students who might otherwise miss out. Through their work, Alex isn't just teaching test strategies—he's challenging an unfair system.

Along Alex's Trails: A Morning to Reflect

On Sundays, Alex heads out on solo hikes, exploring trails and observing wildlife along the way. These quiet mornings give him time to reflect, recharge, and fully enjoy the beauty of the outdoors at his own pace.
