LEARNING WITH ROWAN:

Sharing, Solving, and Showing Up for Others!

When you first meet Rowan, the first thing that stands out is his curiosity. He's the kind of person who doesn't just do what he's told. He wants to understand why! Rowan said, laughing, "I always ask why. I actually want to know." That sense of interest, mixed with humor, defines the way he sees the world. Beyond curiosity, Rowan's presence is marked by care. He's the person classmates know they can turn to. Whether they need help with a problem or just someone to talk to, Rowan is always there. "If students or teachers have any problems," he said, "they can always come to me, and I can try to help them go through it." Rowan's curiosity and compassion combine into a community-building mindset.

Snack Bar Hero, A Little Kindness

Rowan's box of snack bars has become a small legend at Maeser. Bought for just three dollars a box, those twelve bars represent something more than food: they're Rowan's way of making sure no one feels left out or forgotten. "I like sharing," he said. "I don't know what people are going through, but I can at least help them not be hungry." It's a simple act of generosity that reflects his character.

Gathering Around The Table: Rolling Dice and Finding Focus

When Rowan talks about his family, you can tell how much those traditions mean to him. On weekends and holidays, everyone gathers for board game nights--cousins, grandparents, aunts, and anyone who's in town. The living room is filled with laughter, snacks, and friendly competition. One of Rowan's favorite games is a haunted house board game where one person secretly becomes the traitor. Rowan has ended up as the traitor more than once, and it's always the highlight of the night.

That same sense of focus and rhythm shows up in another part of Rowan's life: typing. He enjoys taking part in typing races and challenging himself to improve his speed. Complex sentences, long words, and punctuation make it more exciting for him. Whether he's typing at full speed or playing board games with his family, Rowan always finds a way to enjoy the process, focus on the moment, and bring people closer together.
